Verse 1

I only know my face from what the mirror shows
There's no one in my family with exactly the same nose
How did I end up so far from one who should be near?
No matter how I ask, my history's unclear
But I can't stop wondering though
If it would it feel better to know?

Chorus 1

Are my roots where I plant my feet on the ground?
In my genes, if I could turn myself inside out?
In my family tree, if only it could be found?
All is possible, all but none
But there's no way to know from where I've come

Verse 2

I know I'm half a farmer, I love the earth, the plants and sky
So who made me the scholar that's always asking why?
Was it just the modern time in which I've been brought up?
I can ask a hundred times, but I know when to stop
I no longer long to know
And can let these questions go

Chorus 2

For my roots they are my two feet on the ground
And my genes show themselves inside out
And for as long as real trees can be found
All is possible, all but none
In my heart I know from where I've come
